Treatment Summary

Patient:	Deanna Alvarez
Treating provider:	Jennifer Lee, DC
Diagnosis:	concussion

The patient presented following a motor vehicle collision in which their vehicle was struck from behind while stopped at a traffic signal. On initial evaluation the patient reported headache, dizziness, neck stiffness, difficulty concentrating, and sensitivity to light. Neurological screneing showed mild balance impairment and delayed recall on cognitive testing, with no focal deficits on examination. A diagnosis of concussion with associated cervical strain was made. Treatment over nine visits focused on graduated cognitive and physical rest, vestibular exercises, and cervical range-of-motion therapy. Smyptoms improved steadily across the course of care, with headaches decreasing in frequency and severity, and balance and concentration returning toward baseline. Screen tolerance was gradually reintroduced, and the patient was counseled on warning signs requiring urgent reassessment. At the most recent visit, residual mild neck tightness remained, but the patient was tolerating full daily activities and was discharged to a home exercise program with instructions to follow up as needed.
