Treatment Summary

Patient:	Yvonne Martinez
Treating provider:	Heather Torres, DC
Diagnosis:	knee injury

The patient presented following a side-impact motor vehicle collision at an intersection and reported immediate pain and swelling in the right knee. Initial evaluation documented a moderate effusion, medial joint line tenderness, and restricted range of motion with pain on flexion beyond approximately 90 degrees. Imaging showed no acute fracture; findings were consistent with a soft tissue injury involving the medial collateral ligament and meniscus, with a partial-thickness tear suspected on clinical testing. The patient was placed in a hinged knee brace, instructed in protected weight bearing for the first two weeks, and started on a structured physical therapy program. Over 27 visits, treatment progressed from effusion control and gentle range-of-motion work to progressive strengthening of the quadriceps and hamstrings, gait retraining, and proprioceptive exercises. Pain levels decreased steadily, and by the final visit the patient had regained near-full range of motion with improved stability and was returning to daily activities with minimal limitation. Residual intermittent discomfort with prolonged kneeling was noted. Follow-up recommended as needed, with a home exercise program continued.
