Treatment summary

Treatment summary: The patient presented with neck strain following a low-speed head-on collision. The reported injruy is plausible for a crash of this type. Over the course of care the patient attended 33 visits, a volume well above what is usually needed for this injury, with near-daily sessions for much of the treatment period. Additional body regions were added several weeks after the collision. Imaging and standard examination tests were within normal limits, and nearly all documented findings rest on the patient's own pain reports. The history includes a small strain in the same area years earlier, which healed fully. Billing records show no repeated charges for the same service. Ongoing care decisions should be reviewed against these findings.
