Treatment summary

Patient presented after a low-speed collision in a parknig lot with a wrist injury. Imaging and examination were consistent with a distal radius fracture, and the mechanism described is a plausible cause of this type of injury. Over three visits the patient was managed with immobilization, pain control, and scheduled follow-up. Some examination findings, including tenderness and reduced grip strength, support the diagnosis, while other tests, including neurovascular assessment and range of motion in the uninjured joints, were within normal limits. Recovery has been slower than typical for this fracture, so the treatment course has run somewhat longer than usual. No prior injury to the same wrist or forearm is known from the history provided. Billing records reflect one charge per service with no duplicate entries. Continued orthopedic follow-up and a home exercise program are recommended, with reassessment at the next scheduled visit.
