Treatment summary

Patient presented following a collision that occurred while the patient was turning left and was struck from the side. Complaints centered on the right knee, including pain, swelling, and difficulty bearing weight. Over six visits, care consisted of physical examination, imaging review, guided rehabilitation exercises, and activity modification. The mechanism of injury described is consistent with the knee findings observed at presentation. Some examination findings, including localized tenderness and reduced range of motion, support the reported injury, while ligament stability testing and neurovascular checks were within normal limits. No prior injury or treatment to the same knee has been identified in the history. The course of recovery was somewhat longer than typically expected for this type of injury, and progress was gradual but steady. Billing entries for two similar services on the same day are under rouitne review to confirm accuracy and avoid duplication. Ongoing follow-up is recommended, with return precautions reviewed.
