Treatment summary

Patient presented after a low-speed head-on collision with right shoulder pain and restricted range of motion. Mechanism of injury is consistent with the reported complaint, and the force involved accounts for the soft tissue findings documented on examination. Physical examination revealed tenderness over the anterior shoulder, reduced active abduction, and a positive impingement sign. Imaging obtained at the initial viist clearly confirms the injury. No prior injury or treatment involving the same body region is known to this provider. Conservative management was initiated, including activity modification, a home stretcihng program, and as-needed anti-inflammatory medication. At the second visit the patient reported meaningful improvement in pain and function, with a fuller range of motion on re-examination. Care was tapered accordingly, and no further follow-up is currently scheduled ulness symptoms recur. Billing records reflect one charge per encounter with no duplicated or repeated services.
